Are some jobs more important than others?

Let's look at this week's story

Nurses in the Royal College of Nursing (RCN) union have voted for the union's first UK-wide strike in its 106-year history. The action will involve RCN members in more than half of hospitals and community teams, but emergency care will not be affected. Pat Cullen, who is the General Secretary of the RCN, has said nurses are getting an unfair deal and that 'members are saying enough is enough'. She also reports that the strike is for patients as well as workers, because staffing shortages are impacting access to healthcare across the UK. Nursing vacancies are at a record high, meaning staff are stretched and regularly working beyond the end of their shifts.

Read the information about nurses below, which explores more about nurses and their current working conditions.

What roles and responsibilities do nurses have?

Nurses make up the largest group of healthcare workers in the world. They work with other medical staff to care for people who are unwell or injured.

Most nurses work in hospitals or health clinics. Some of their responsibilities include, finding out about a patient's health by asking questions and checking things such as blood pressure and temperature. They often administer medicine, change bandages, help patients move around, and provide other treatment.

Nurses are incredible!
They are the glue that holds our health service together.

Why are nurses taking action?

- Many are working longer and more hours to cover a staffing shortage.
- Some nurses have left the profession, creating bigger staffing pressures.
- Nurses' wages have not been rising in line with the cost of living and some now must use food banks.

They believe striking is the best way to bring positive change for nurses.

Talk about their reasons for taking action at this time.

Look at the resource below, which looks at some of the jobs and roles within the NHS.

Receptionist

Someone who answers the phone, arranges appointments and assists people when they arrive.

A hospital receptionist

Optician

Someone who examines and treats people's eyes, tests their sight and detects eye diseases.

Dentist

Someone who examines and treats people's teeth.

A dentist and their patient

Surgeon

A doctor who is specially trained to perform medical operations.

Paramedic

Someone who provides emergency medical care to people, usually wherever they have fallen ill or become injured.

Paramedics

Porter

Someone who moves patients and things like patient notes and medical equipment from place to place within a hospital.

Midwife

A nurse who is trained to deliver babies and to advise and help people before they have their baby.

Do you think you would enjoy any of these roles?

Resource
two

Look at the resource below, where some people share how society should show gratitude to workers who help us and improve our lives.

"Whilst I think it is great to be appreciative and thankful for workers who help us, I think there is a danger of only really doing this for the people who do jobs that directly impact us. There are so many people doing jobs, perhaps in the background or without us even being aware of, that rarely receive gratitude."

Daksha

"The best way to show gratitude for workers is to make sure they feel valued. This may be done through improving working conditions or increasing pay."

Simon

"I don't really think we need to show our gratitude. People are paid to do their job and it is their choice to do it."

Usman

"I think writing a card or letter, sending a small gift or even donating to a cause that helps the person's job is a great way to show gratitude for the work someone has done."

Carol

"Small gestures to show our appreciation and thanks will always go a long way. As an individual, simply saying 'thank you' is good. Collectively, we can show our thanks on days such as National Teaching Assistants' Day or by taking part in social movements such as 'Clap For Our Carers'."

Reflection

Nurses have a crucial role within healthcare from the very start to the end of our lives. It is vital that the important job they do is rewarded with fair working conditions.

Democracy

We all have a voice and the right to use it. Nurses in the Royal College of Nursing union have voted to strike, which is one way people can share their voice.

UN Rights of a Child

The Royal College of Nursing union is an organisation that nurses can join. We can join or set up groups or organisations as long as it does not harm other people.

Useful vocabulary

Conditions

The physical situations, circumstances or factors that someone is in and affected by.

For the first time, nurses have voted to take action to strike as they believe their conditions and pay are not fair.

Crucial

Extremely important or necessary.

Nurses have a crucial role within healthcare from the very start to the end of our lives.

Healthcare

The activity or business of providing medical services.

She also reports that the strike is for patients as well as workers, because staffing shortages are impacting access to healthcare across the UK.

Strike

To refuse to continue working because of a disagreement with an employer about working conditions, pay levels, or job losses.

... nurses have voted to take action to strike as they believe their conditions and pay are not fair.

Union

An organisation that represents the people who work in a particular industry, protects their rights and may agree pay, working conditions etc. with their employers.

Nurses in the Royal College of Nursing (RCN) union has voted for its first UK-wide strike in its 106-year history.

Vital

Essential or necessary.

What are some of the roles within the NHS?

- Write 'NHS' on the board. What is the NHS? Do you know what NHS stands for?
- Explain that NHS stands for the National Health Service. It is the health service that can be used by everybody in the UK, if they become poorly or injured. Do you know anybody who works for the NHS? What job do they do?
- There are many different jobs and roles within the NHS. Look at resource 1, which shares some of these. Can you think of any other jobs/roles in the NHS? Do you think you would enjoy any of these roles?
- Have you ever used the NHS? Perhaps you have visited the dentist or doctor or been to hospital because you were injured or ill. You may like to share your experience of this if you feel comfortable to.
- There are many different jobs and roles within the NHS. Many of the people doing different jobs need to work together so they can give the best help and care possible. Can you think about the skills you might need to work well with others e.g., good communication, being polite, listening, being organised, being reliable, being honest, respecting others. Do you think you work well with others?

Reflection

There are many different jobs and roles within the NHS. People working for the NHS help and care for us if we become poorly or injured.

How should society show gratitude to workers who help us and improve our lives?

- There are many jobs people do that help others. Can you make a list of jobs that you think help us or improve our lives in some way?
- Discuss some of your experiences of people who may have helped you or others whilst doing their job e.g., shop attendant, cleaner, teacher, personal trainer, plumber, vet. Do you think some jobs help us more than others? Why?
- Have you ever shown somebody gratitude or that you appreciated the job they had done? Do you think we should do this? Look at resource 2, where some people share how society should show gratitude to workers who help us and improve our lives. Share your thoughts on these opinions. Is there anyone you strongly agree/disagree with?
- Focus on Daksha's comment. Do you think there are some jobs in which people help us or improve our lives that we aren't perhaps aware of? Do you think people who work in the armed forces help us? What about people who maintain our sewerage system?
- How do you think it might feel to be thanked for doing your job? Do you think everyone wants to be thanked?

Reflection

There are many different ways people can show gratitude to workers for the job they do. We can choose who we want to thank and how we want to thank them.

KS2 follow-up ideas

Option 1

Think about some of the different jobs there are. Make a list.

- Have you thought about a job you might like to do in the future?
- What are you good at?
- What do you enjoy doing?
- Is there anything you would like to find out about this job?

Plan and write a letter to someone who is currently doing a job that is of interest to you. You could share why you are interested in their job, ask them to explain more about their role and even thank them for the job they do.

Option 2

Look at the list of monthly costs someone living in the UK may have.

- Rent/mortgage - £800
- Food/supermarket shop - £400
- Swimming lessons - £25
- Heating/electricity - £180
- Car related costs (fuel, insurance, tax) - £250
- Football club - £20
- Pet care/food - £50
- Mobile phone - £40
- Council tax - £160
- Meals out - £100
- Clothes - £100
- Presents/gifts - £50
- Days out - £150

Use the list to work out how much this person might need to earn each month. Explore which items are essential and which you could do without.

- Do you think it is possible to save some money each month?
- Can you think of any other expenses someone may have?

KS1 follow-up ideas

Option 1

There are many different jobs/roles within the NHS. Using resource 1 to help you, think about the following:

- Which NHS job do you think you would enjoy the most/least?
- Which NHS job do you think you would be good at?
- Does everyone feel the same?
- Are there any jobs within the NHS that you would like to find out more about?

Look at the question openers: what, who, why, when, how, where. Use them to help you write a question. Don't forget to include a question mark too!

Option 2

Set up a hospital role-play area. Think about the following:

- Who will be the receptionist, nurse, porter, patient etc?
- How many patients do we need to see?
- Who is first, second, next, last?
- How will we check they are okay? Can you measure their temperature? Can you measure their pulse rate?
- What is wrong with them?
- What do we need to help them feel better? Bandages, medicine etc?

St. Elmo's fire

A captain of an Airbus has been talking about witnessing a stunning display through his cockpit window. Whilst flying from Miami to Dallas, Luis Andress witnessed, what he described as, 'the first time he has ever seen St Elmo's fire with such intensity.' St Elmo's Fire, also called Witchfire or Witch's Fire, is a weather event that happens during intense thunderstorms, this time during Hurricane Ian. It occurs when the atmosphere becomes charged and an electrical discharge of plasma is created between an object and the air around it. St. Elmo's fire is named after St. Elmo (the patron saint of sailors) as the phenomenon, which can warn of an imminent lightning strike, is often seen on aeroplanes and ships. It was traditionally regarded by sailors with awe and sometimes considered to be a sign of good luck.

Edible drones

Researchers at the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology Lausanne have announced that they have created a drone with snackable wings. Scientists developed the flying food for rescue missions, as drones can access very remote places but can only carry about 30% of their mass. They thought that if the drone can't carry the food, perhaps they could make the drone from snacks – and they have! The wings of the drone are made from rice cakes laser-cut into hexagonal shapes (to make them easier to stick together) and fixed together by gelatine. The wings are then wrapped in plastic to protect them from the elements, so they don't break and can be eaten whilst the stranded person awaits a rescue team. A prototype drone was able to successfully fly 10 metres per second. Bokeon Kwak, who lead the project, said the wings taste like 'a crunchy rice crisp cookie with a little touch of raw gelatin'.

A lost dog has handed herself in and found help at her local police station! The clever border collie, called Rosie, knew where to go when she got lost. She was caught on a Leicester police station security camera walking through the door and calmly sitting down to wait her turn! The video was posted to the Leicester police's Facebook page after officers reunited the 10-year-old border collie with her worried owners, Julie and Steve. 'Our staff fetched some water for Rosie, and made fast friends with plenty of fuss,' Leicestershire Police wrote alongside the video. 'Thankfully, she was wearing a collar, so a lead was available to contact Rosie's owner, who was delighted she had been found safe and well.' Rosie had become startled by a firework and run away from her owner whilst on a dog walk. 'I was so pleased and so happy she was safe and so proud of her that she was clever enough to find her way to the police station,' said Julie.

Last week's topic:

Should we ever have to change our appearance?

Yes - if it is required for school and for people to be [in] uniform it's fair. As long as you are not asking people to change who they are.

Betty

No because we should be us and whoever we want to be!

Emillia

Appearance should not be changed because it doesn't really matter what you look like. Everybody is unique in a different way and we should all be treated equally.
